The mission of The George Cedric Metcalf Charitable Foundation is to enhance the effectiveness of people and organizations working together to help Canadians imagine and build a just, healthy, and creative society.

We create change by:

· Working at the intersection of climate, biodiversity, and sustainable livelihoods
· Focusing on sustainable economic opportunities for low-income people and communities in Toronto
· Supporting leadership and innovation in the performing arts
Crafting Capacity

Non-profit leaders are the heart of their organizations, helping to engage and mobilize communities on a range of pressing social, cultural, and environmental issues. Investing in the leadership, capacity, and passion of those working on the front lines of social change is core to all of Metcalf’s work.
Threading Together

Metcalf believes that change happens when we share hopeful visions of the future, work and learn collectively, and think broadly in pursuit of comprehensive solutions. By supporting organizations to develop new strategies that strengthen the social fabric, the Foundation is helping to weave together relationships, connections, and experiences for common good and purpose.
Interwoven Actions

We are living in a time of profound change, where simple solutions to the complex, interconnected issues we are facing—from growing income inequality to the impacts of climate change—are often not adequate. Metcalf partners with a range of philanthropic peers and sector leaders to collectively push into new spaces, building movement and momentum around emerging insights, ideas, and opportunities.
BRITISH WRITER L.P. HARTLEY famously called the past “a foreign country.” It’s an apt description of the divide between the period we’re reporting on and what has happened since. We were in the midst of producing this biennial report when the global pandemic swept across Canada, disrupting all of our lives, transforming politics, the economy, and everyday life in its wake. Yet the theme we had chosen pre-COVID, Weaving the Strands, feels more relevant than ever.

The pandemic has emphasized how profoundly we rely on each other for our health and material well-being, and how much our lives are interwoven. It has also revealed that some of the strands that connect us have worn thin. Resilience comes from recognizing our interdependence and reinforcing those strands before they break.

This report documents how the Metcalf Foundation has been working to protect and strengthen that mesh.

While designed as standalone programs, the Foundation’s three areas of focus, the environment, inclusive local economies, and the performing arts, are grounded in shared values and guided by a common goal to help Canadians imagine and build a just, healthy, and creative society. Through our Environment program we are working at the intersection of climate, biodiversity, and sustainable livelihoods to advance integrated solutions to two of the major societal challenges of our time—climate change and biodiversity loss.

Well-aligned and connected strategies among many partners are core to the work of our Inclusive Local Economies program, where we are focused on creating sustainable economic opportunities for low-income people and communities in Toronto. And our Performing Arts program’s long-standing support for leadership and innovation in the arts sector is all the more essential, as this vital part of our community and culture is challenged as never before.

The world has changed dramatically, and the future is full of unknowns. Nevertheless, the stories and highlights that follow give us confidence about where we go from here. The remarkable accomplishments of our partners and allies deserve all the more recognition during these challenging circumstances, as do the generosity and vision of our board, advisors, fellows, friends, and staff. As we look toward our post-pandemic future, we are certain that their tireless efforts and dedication will continue to strengthen Canada’s social fabric, and champion greater equity and opportunity for all.

Environment

Metcalf’s Environment program is working at the intersection of climate, biodiversity, and sustainable livelihoods.
FROM FORESTS TO FARMLANDS and grasslands to wetlands, Canada’s globally significant ecosystems sustain people and wildlife, and help to maintain a stable climate here on Earth. Two of the major societal challenges of our time—climate change and biodiversity loss—are interconnected and growing in scope, threatening these life-support systems.

Historically, governments and environmental organizations have largely addressed climate and biodiversity issues separately.

A few years ago, the Foundation’s Environment program launched Carbon Landscapes, a new funding stream designed to connect climate and conservation work, helping to advance natural climate solutions across Canada. This new stream complemented the Environment program’s two other climate initiatives, Cycle City and Climate Blueprints.

Through Carbon Landscapes, the Foundation has invested in sector and community capacity to build public understanding of and support for integrated approaches to climate action, biodiversity conservation, and sustainable livelihoods. On the ground, the initiative supports Indigenous-led conservation in two regions with unique climate and biodiversity values: the Hudson Bay and James Bay Lowlands and the Mackenzie River Basin.

The past two years have seen growing interest, attention, and support for advancing natural climate solutions within Canada and beyond. With colleagues and partners, the Foundation celebrated new national and sub-national commitments to natural climate solutions, along with government investments in Indigenous-led conservation to protect and steward vital ecosystems across the country.
Environment

Based on the early successes of its Carbon Landscapes initiative and the growing interest in work at the intersection of climate, biodiversity, and sustainable livelihoods, the Foundation announced it would deepen its commitment to natural climate solutions.

Starting in 2020, the Environment program will direct 100% of its funding to Carbon Landscapes.

The decision to commit fully to natural climate solutions also meant that the Foundation would be winding down its Cycle City and Climate Blueprints funding streams as it headed into the new year.

Over the past half-decade of Metcalf support for cycling issues in Toronto, the Foundation helped launch innovative programs like Scarborough Cycles, mobilizing diverse constituencies from different parts of the city to advance cycling issues. And after years of effort and hard work, new bike lanes have been installed on Bloor, University, Dundas, and other major corridors throughout the city.

For its Climate Blueprints work, the Foundation believed the value of this stream’s focus on policy implementation could be integrated with Carbon Landscapes, where there exists a need to provide thoughtful, well-researched advice on how best to advance natural climate solutions in both policy and practice. So while it formally wound down Climate Blueprints as a standalone stream in 2019, the initiative’s strategies and approach are carried forward under Carbon Landscapes.

In April 2019, 40 environment sector leaders from across Canada convened in Toronto for a gathering called Nature and Climate Change. This Metcalf-funded event, the first of its kind in Canada, provided a much-needed space for leaders to discuss ways in which climate and biodiversity work could be better integrated. This gathering established several working groups to guide and coordinate cross-sector efforts to stem biodiversity loss, mitigate climate change, and sustain livelihoods. Participants also committed to organize a national gathering in early 2020 to advance nature-based climate solutions in Canada.

Support for on-the-ground efforts that benefit biodiversity, sustain livelihoods, and mitigate climate change is a key focus of the Foundation’s Carbon Landscapes initiative. A 2018 grant through the MakeWay Foundation supported Lutsel K’e Dene First Nation, K’atl’odeeche First Nation, Dehcho First Nations, Sambaa K’e First Nation, Ka’agee Tu First Nation, Jean Marie River First Nation, Tlicho Government, and the community of Fort Good Hope, to engage in the protected areas planning process in the Northwest Territories. In 2019, the Foundation committed funds to five First Nations working to design and establish Indigenous Protected and Conserved Areas in their traditional territories, located throughout the Hudson Bay and James Bay Lowlands. This region is home to one of the largest peatland complexes in the world.

A Metcalf-funded gathering in May 2019 convened Indigenous leaders from across the country, as well as representatives from non-governmental organizations, universities, and other sector partners who are interested in aligning Indigenous-led conservation and

Through Carbon Landscapes, the Foundation funds timely, well-researched, and accessible reports that inform new policies and programs, financing mechanisms, and other levers to support natural climate solutions. Finding Common Ground: Six Steps for Tackling Climate Change and Biodiversity Loss in Canada, a Metcalf-funded report released in August 2019, demonstrates how Canada’s vast forests, grasslands, oceans, and wetlands could play a much larger role in climate change mitigation. Authored by Florence Daviet, the report recommended establishing a Nature-Based Climate Solutions Fund to invest in activities that reduce emissions from land-use change and ecosystem degradation while benefitting biodiversity. A $3-billion Natural Climate Solutions Fund was subsequently announced in September 2019 as a commitment of the re-elected federal government.

Participants at the Indigenous-led Conservation and Carbon Storage gathering discuss shared challenges, opportunities, and other areas of interest including carbon finance, negotiating carbon agreements, establishing guardians’ programs, and more.
Inclusive Local Economies

Metcalf invests in organizations, communities, and leaders, working on long-term strategies and innovative approaches that create sustainable economic opportunities and decent work for low-income people in Toronto.
POVERTY IS NOT a new issue for Toronto. Despite being a prosperous and vibrant city, disparities are intensifying, exacerbated by inequities of race, gender, ethnicity, and neighbourhood. It is imperative that we reverse this trend—not only to improve the lives and working conditions of people in low-wage and unstable employment, but also to continue our progress in building a just, healthy, creative society.

The Foundation’s Inclusive Local Economies program supports organizations and leaders who are creating long-term, sustainable economic opportunities and outcomes for low-income people and communities in Toronto. The Opportunities Fund cultivates new models, bold ideas, creative partnerships, and promising public policies aimed at increasing access to quality jobs, improving low-wage and precarious work, and strengthening neighbourhood economies.

Metcalf has been deeply engaged in workforce development in Toronto. For low-income people who are seeking to enter or to advance in today’s labour market, the challenges are profound. Effective solutions require partnerships among business, government, funders, workers, and community. Fostering this joint effort means investing in the knowledge, skills, and relationships of the region’s workforce leaders.

The Toronto Sector Skills Academy (TSSA), a Metcalf-led 10-month fellowship program developed in partnership with the Washington-based Aspen Institute, welcomed its second cohort of fellows in 2018. The TSSA is a forum for workforce leaders to work collaboratively on local systems-based challenges. Together, they craft shared solutions and strategies for change.
Inclusive Local Economies

Participants who come from non-profit organizations, labour, workforce intermediaries, colleges, and government, spent 12 days together learning about effective system-changing workforce models, applying insights to their own strategies. They expanded their networks, deepened their knowledge, and fostered new partnerships.

In 2019, the Ontario government announced an extensive overhaul of employment services, social assistance, apprenticeships, and education programs, with the stated aim of improving employment outcomes and better aligning skills and training programs with the needs of business. This significant alteration to Ontario’s workforce system is an opportunity to develop more responsive and effective solutions to address poverty. Metcalf collaborated with the Toronto Region Board of Trade and United Way Greater Toronto on the report.

Help Wanted: Modernizing Employment and Skills Training Services in Ontario. This report provides principles and recommendations to help develop solutions for generating economic development and meaningful jobs.

Improving economic opportunities for low-income people requires multi-faceted solutions. In partnership with JPMorgan Chase Foundation, Metcalf and four philanthropic organizations explored the potential of working jointly to strategically invest in workforce solutions that focus on systems change and greater equity and inclusion. After a year-long learning and planning process, The Counselling Foundation of Canada, JPMorgan Chase Foundation, Ontario Trillium Foundation, TD Ready Commitment, United Way Greater Toronto, and the Metcalf Foundation formalized their commitment to pool funds forming the Toronto Workforce Funders Collaborative. It is the first entity of its kind in Canada.

how upcoming infrastructure development could result in local employment, and developed relationships to work on community wealth strategies with their neighbourhoods’ university anchor organizations. The Parkdale People’s Economy, a network of more than 30 neighbourhood-based organizations and hundreds of local members, researched how financial capital and neighbourhood investment can assist in achieving their vision for decent work, shared wealth, and equitable development. This effort culminated in the Parkdale Community Wealth Building: Community Financing Report.

Metcalf helped the Better Way Alliance solidify its network of business and employers who champion a $15 minimum wage for Ontario workers, the CEE Centre for Young Black Professionals to test alumni retention strategies, and Margaret’s to upskill its staff. By investing in community organizing, leadership development, and participatory research to address precarious work, Metcalf funding backed the priorities led by migrant workers, caregivers, international students, and personal support workers.

Metcalf has been heavily involved with FoodReach, a community-led food procurement and online distribution system for the non-profit sector, since its inception. The initiative with Metcalf’s support, has now merged into the North York Harvest Food Bank, to enhance its food sourcing, warehousing, logistics training, and delivery activities.

Strong responses to the ongoing toll of working poverty require tenacity, creativity, and leadership. While much has been accomplished through the actions of many, the Foundation continues to seek partnerships and support ideas that can help mitigate and reverse the systemic barriers faced by low-income Torontonians.

Performing Arts

Metcalf’s Performing Arts program supports and celebrates people and organizations in their engagement with the learning, experimentation, and reinvention necessary to deepen connections between a healthy arts community and the public in an ever-changing world.
ENGAGING WITH THE PERFORMING ARTS, as creators or consumers, cultivates our shared humanity. The program’s two main streams focus on nurturing organizational innovation and developing individual leadership.

Since 2003, the Foundation’s primary support for the arts has come through multi-year strategic initiatives to support organizational innovation. Going beyond day-to-day operations, these initiatives allow leaders to test new responses to persistent challenges and to strategically pursue exciting opportunities. Experimentation, learning, and peer-to-peer exchange are at the heart of these initiatives.

During this reporting period, we began to wind down one version of the initiative, the Creative Strategies Incubator (CrSI), and launched its replacement, Staging Change (SC).

Through CrSI, Toronto performing arts organizations developed strategic responses to commonly-shared topics such as building new revenue streams, increasing audience and community engagement, and unlocking artistic potential. Through a Learning Network, participants amplified their collective efforts and shared their outcomes and best practices externally to foster change across the sector.

Collaborating with an external service provider for the first time, the Foundation introduced SC in 2018 to offer organizations a more robust set of tools to better respond to the ever-increasing complexity of their challenges and opportunities. Our delivery partner, EmcArts, works with individuals and organizations to systematize innovation and adaptive change in the arts and culture field.
Performing Arts

SC is a tiered initiative that begins with a large group of grantees and ends with a smaller cohort that has demonstrated exceptional capacity to iterate and amplify radical new visions. By the end of 2019, four organizations—the National Ballet of Canada, Tapestry Opera, The Theatre Centre, and Theatre Direct—worked with cross-departmental teams to examine the significance and openness of legacy art forms for today’s audiences, to reposition the role and agency of young people in the creative process, and to prioritize generosity across all segments of an organization’s constituents.

We celebrate extraordinary artists and develop individual leadership through four initiatives: our long-standing Internships program; the train-the-trainer component of Staging Change; our Leading and Learning program; and starting in 2019, The Johanna Metcalf Performing Arts Prizes/Les Prix Johanna-Metcalf des Arts de la scène.

Neema Bickersteth, Mikaela Bennett, Divine Brown, Jewelle Blackman, Arlene Duncan, and Cécile Muhire workshop Volcano Theatre’s Treemonisha.
Performing Arts

Since 2001, more than 300 people across Ontario have benefitted from year-long internships with arts organizations that close gaps in their skill sets under a mentor’s guidance. Over the past two years, internships were awarded across various practices including community arts and education, playwriting, festival direction, administration, wardrobe construction, and music direction. Many Metcalf interns go on to make lasting contributions to the field and some have mentored a second generation of performing arts leaders.

The Foundation’s Staging Change Adaptive Facilitator Initiative provides local consultants with specialized training and opportunities to deliver the program in partnership with Metcalf and EmcArts. It also helps participants deepen their own practices outside the Foundation. Our Leading and Learning program supported a group of three organizations to expand their relationship with reconciliation and a dance artist to explore leadership and diversity with an international gathering of peers. And finally, our newest initiative, the Johannas, celebrates artists across Ontario who have made an impact on the field and who have shown great promise in the pursuit of their practices.

In addition to its core funding initiatives, the Performing Arts program engages with partners on opportunities of common interest that influence and support change. The Arts Funder Consortium, which includes the Canada Council for the Arts, the Ontario and Toronto Arts Councils, the Ontario Trillium Foundation, and Metcalf, continued its collective efforts to explore revenue diversification projects for a sector whose financial demands exceed available resources. Originally established to pilot a shared charitable platform, the consortium now focuses on social finance, an emergent practice that is beginning to show promise for the arts sector.

We work with highly regarded thought leaders to articulate new ideas and approaches that we think will impact the sector. We curated a six-part series for the online journal The Philanthropist on the relationship between art, culture, and philanthropy in Canada. Along with our sector partners, the Foundation hosted a gathering with

Les Prix Johanna-Metcalf des Arts de la scène

On December 12, 2019, friends of the Foundation gathered to celebrate the inaugural winners of The Johanna Metcalf Performing Arts Prizes/Les Prix Johanna-Metcalf des Arts de la scène. Johanna Metcalf was at the heart of the Foundation’s work for over 40 years and the prizes carry on her legacy as a tireless advocate for the arts. Each winner has made a recognized impact on the field and the public, and has shown great promise in the ongoing pursuit of their ambitious and visionary practice. Winners received $25,000 each and named a protégé who was awarded $5,000. The Johannas will be delivered on a biennial basis in partnership with the Ontario Arts Council.

Alice Ping Yee Ho is a prolific award-winning Canadian composer and noted classical pianist. The two-time JUNO Award nominee effortlessly crosses and references many musical genres.

Dr. Roydon Tse, protégé of Alice Ping Yee Ho, is an award-winning composer, pianist, and educator originally from Hong Kong. He holds a Doctorate in composition from the University of Toronto.
Toronto composer James Rolfe has been commissioned and performed by ensembles, orchestras, choirs, theatres, and opera companies in Canada, the USA, Europe, Asia, Australia, and New Zealand.

Sophie Dupuis, protégé of James Rolfe, is a composer, violinist, and music educator from New Brunswick based in Ottawa. Her composition work focuses on acoustic, electroacoustic, and interdisciplinary art music.
Santee Smith (Tekaronhiáhkwa) is a multidisciplinary artist and founder of Haudenosaunee company Kaha:wi Dance Theatre from the Kahnyen’kehàka Nation, Turtle Clan, Six Nations of the Grand River, Haldimand Treaty Territory, Ontario.

Raised in Lac La Croix First Nation and based in Toronto, Cody Berry, protégé of Santee Smith (Tekaronhiáhkwa), identifies as a two-spirited Ojibway contemporary dance artist. His work combines traditional knowledge (protocol) with conventional movement methods.
Maryem Tollar has been an integral part of the development and reach of world music in Canada. She has performed, composed, and worked with artists across a variety of musical traditions and disciplinary genres nationally and internationally in English, French, and Arabic.

Demitrios Petsalakis, protégé of Maryem Tollar, is a Toronto artist who focuses on creating music that represents both his Greek heritage and the multicultural community of which he is a part.
Innovation Fellowship

The Metcalf Innovation Fellowship program supports critical thinkers as they address challenging ecological, social, economic, and cultural issues. Fellows’ new work and innovative practices connect to the broader world, advance policy priorities, and strengthen the Foundation’s programs.
FOR 25 YEARS, environmentalist Graham Saul has grappled with society’s slow progress on environmental issues, even in the face of crisis. For his paper, Environmentalists, what are we fighting for? he interviewed more than 100 leading Canadian environmentalists, many of whom feel they have not sufficiently galvanized a social movement. The report garnered strong media coverage, including an episode of CBC Radio’s Ideas, and a feature interview with TVOntario’s Steve Paikin.

Longtime Metcalf Innovation Fellow John Stapleton wrote The Working Poor in the Toronto Region: A closer look at the increasing numbers, his third report on working poverty. Between 2006 and 2016, working poverty increased in the Toronto region, growing by 27% in areas north of the city centre—despite strong employment, minimum-wage increases, and new government transfers. Stapleton separated data by gender, age, education, and ethno-cultural and immigration status. Additional analysis by Dr. Carl James and Dr. Kofi Hope provided contextual framing for the findings that in Toronto, racialized people comprise 46% of the general working-age population, but make up 63% of the working poor, with the city’s Black communities affected the most. This work aims to provoke further research and improve wages, job stability, anti-racism strategies, and support programs. Metcalf commissioned follow-up essays from Ajeev Bhatia, Claire-Hélène Hesse-Boutin, and Maya Roy to share their reflections. The report also earned front-page coverage in the Toronto Star.

In 2017, Stapleton and anti-poverty activist Bee Lee Soh were selected for the federal government’s Ministerial Advisory Committee on Poverty. The committee informed Canada’s first-ever National Poverty Reduction Strategy.

Despite best intentions, Soh faced many challenges to participation as she navigated organizers’ assumptions about her access to technology and financial credit. In Voice of Experience: Engaging People with Lived Experience of Poverty in Consultations, she reflects on the barriers she faced. She and Stapleton offer a practical guide for meaningful, valuable engagement with people who have lived experience of poverty.

In Good Food, Good Jobs, Metcalf Innovation Fellow and labour market researcher Tom Zizys reports on Ontario’s agri-food sector, which accounts for over eight per cent of jobs in the province. In his opening essay, Zizys chronicles how supporting a good food/local food economic agenda has failed to address the sector’s high proportion of low-quality jobs. Five leaders and activists in the food, social justice, and workforce development movements, respond to Zizys’ essay. Mandie Abrams, Fay Faraday, Joshna Maharaj, Kathryn Scharf, and Paul M. Taylor provide a wide-range of perspectives on how to improve quality of food and food jobs, while ensuring accessibility and affordability. Zizys’ concluding essay explores the relationship between food-worker wages and food prices.

Danielle Olsen and David Maggs are our most recent fellows. Olsen, a workforce strategy consultant, is profiling four Ontario workforce initiatives to highlight how to connect low-income people with good jobs. Maggs, an artist and academic, is examining the social impact and value of art in terms of personal experience and other goals. He is also developing a framework that empowers artists, arts organizations, funders, policymakers, and researchers to navigate questions of social impact on artistic terms.

Leading and Learning

The Foundation supports non-profit leaders on the front lines of social change to develop and apply new skills. Through its two funding streams, the Leading and Learning program strengthens generative relationships among sector peers, and also helps individual leaders seeking professional development.

Six Nations retreat participants from the Canadian Dance Assembly, Canadian Alliance of Dance Artists East, and the Playwrights Guild of Canada.
Leading and Learning

The Network Learning Fund strengthens relationships through shared learning opportunities. One charitable organization leads each grant, partnering with other groups to explore a shared challenge or area of interest.

The Canadian Dance Assembly with the Canadian Alliance of Dance Artists (Ontario) and the Playwrights Guild of Canada, took part in a Cultural Competency Training Intensive to deepen their relationship with reconciliation. The five-day event on the Six Nations Reserve exposed the participants to new Indigenous knowledge that encouraged them to reconsider our responsibility to care for the land we share.

Staff from the Friends of the Greenbelt Foundation along with Équiterre and Régénération Canada, traveled to California to learn more about the critical role that agriculture can play in mitigating climate change. The three grantees met with leading policymakers, scientists, farmers, ranchers, environmental groups, and representatives from the food industry in order to better understand the factors driving a reduction in agriculture’s carbon footprint in the Golden State.

Joanna Ivey, the National Ballet’s Associate Director of Development, attended the Dance East Rural Retreat in the United Kingdom. The gathering was an opportunity to engage with peers from around the globe on issues affecting classical ballet including new forms of leadership, relevance of the art form, and the role of diversity.

MakeWay Foundation
Wendy Cooper, at the time a Senior Solutions Advisor at the MakeWay Foundation (formerly Tides Canada Foundation), participated in RSF Social Finance’s Integrated Capital Institute, a training program that pushes people beyond traditional philanthropy and fundraising to mobilize other types of financing and investment to address social and environmental issues.

Grants and Other Funding
IN 2018–2019, the Foundation invested over $11 million in charitable activity amongst our three program areas: the environment, inclusive local economies, and the performing arts. In addition, we reserve a small fund for making grants outside of our formal program areas. These grants provide us with the opportunity to support important initiatives that are harmonious with our goals but do not exactly fit into our program areas. One of the highlights of our granting in this period is the collaborations undertaken by all three program areas with electronic and print publications.

The Environment program’s Carbon Landscapes initiative partnered with The Narwhal, an award-winning online magazine that publishes in-depth and investigative journalism about Canada’s natural world. With Metcalf support, The Narwhal produced a series of eight stories on opportunities and challenges related to natural climate solutions in Canada. As a non-profit, The Narwhal can accept donations to support coverage of particular topics but maintains editorial control.

The Local, an independent online magazine exploring urban health and social issues in Toronto, received two years of support from the Inclusive Local Economies program to help build its operations. With its singular focus on Toronto, the magazine reports from corners of the city too often ignored or misunderstood. It aims to fill a role that many media outlets neglect, turning complex policy issues into compelling narratives, and addressing problems that are pressing and ongoing. The magazine borrows tools from ethnography, digital storytelling, and journalism to look beyond what data can tell us about the issues, needs, gaps, and opportunities from a human experience standpoint and gives voice to people who are often not heard.
The Performing Arts program collaborated with The Philanthropist on a series of stories about Canadian arts and culture philanthropy. The purpose of the series is to highlight the current state of the field, animate some of the pressing questions it is facing, and illuminate the impacts and the benefits that flow from arts and culture. The series features diverse voices, perspectives, and expertise, covering politics, strategies, and impact of supporting the arts in Canada.

RESEARCH AND PARTNER PUBLICATIONS

Canada’s vast forests, grasslands, oceans, and wetlands provide essential ecosystem services. In Finding Common Ground, a publication from the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, lead author Florence Daviet and her team present a roadmap for both scientists and policymakers to build a bridge between conservation and climate goals.

STAGING CHANGE

Stage 1
$3,000 per company to support their Stage 1 organizational team, representing artistic, administrative, and board leadership, to participate in a series of six interactive workshops designed to uncover and name a complex challenge and begin to identify a potential response

- Business for the Arts
- Coal Mine Theatre
- Harbourfront Centre
- Luminato Festival
- The National Ballet of Canada
- Nova Dance
- Pratibha Arts
- ProArteDanza Performance Inc.
- Roseneath Theatre
- The School of Toronto Dance Theatre
- Studio 180 Theatre
- Tapestry Opera
- The Theatre Centre
- Theatre Direct Canada

Stage 2
$5,000 per company for on-site organizational coaching, during which a large stakeholder working group will assess each organization’s adaptive capacities, investigate barriers to adaptive change, identify significant complex challenges that they are facing, and carry out Small Experiments with Radical Intent to test emerging responses

- Luminato Festival
- The National Ballet of Canada
- ProArteDanza Performance Inc.
- The School of Toronto Dance Theatre
- Studio 180 Theatre
- Tapestry Opera
- The Theatre Centre
- Theatre Direct Canada

Stage 3
$25,000 per company to support Incubating Innovation, a one-year process that offers a full immersion in an innovation project with the larger aim of leveraging significant increases in capacity and, potentially, organizational transformation. Each company is working on its self-identified complex challenge listed below:

The National Ballet of Canada to engage deeply with today’s diverse audiences and artists as the ballet company for all of Canada

Tapestry Opera to dramatically increase their audiences outside of current opera goers and in the general public

The Theatre Centre to apply reckless generosity to the company members themselves

Theatre Direct Canada to develop relationships in their community in order to raise awareness about their renewed mission and presence, to bring more diverse voices into their work, and to find unconventional spaces to create and perform in their neighbourhood
