PERFORMING ARTS PROGRAM

Staging Change:
Associate Facilitator Training Initiative

2018 Application

This document should be read alongside the Staging Change Associate Facilitator Training Initiative Outline, which describes program design, curriculum, and Associate Facilitator compensation in detail.

Introduction

Staging Change, Metcalf’s latest version of its multi-year strategic funding program in the performing arts, is concerned with building local capacity to navigate complex organizational challenges by thinking and acting adaptively.

Alongside the organizational work, Staging Change will also invest in individual non-profit sector consultants and organizational leaders in all arts disciplines to develop their capacity to facilitate adaptive change processes in response to complex challenges. This aspect of Staging Change is called the Associate Facilitator Training Initiative and will provide useful training in this area. Metcalf and EmcArts, an arts-focused non-profit service provider based in New York, believe the initiative will not only strengthen the legacy of the program across the arts community but will also open up new and timely opportunities for experienced practitioners and consultants.

Up to eight Toronto-based consulting practitioners, teaching artists, and organizational leaders will be selected to participate in Stages 1 and 2 of the training. Up to five individuals of the original eight will be selected to engage in Stages 3 and 4. Further information regarding this second selection process will be made available at the beginning of the program.
Curriculum and Approach

The training sessions will balance knowledge development and the rehearsal of well-researched facilitation practices with action learning in real-life situations. EmcArts’ curriculum makes use of a variety of creative facilitation exercises and arts-based activities.

The background research and theoretical underpinning of EmcArts’ programs is extensive and multi-faceted. Rarely has the theory and practice used by EmcArts in its program design been applied to not-for-profits or to the arts. The leading influences include:

- Dave Snowden/Cognitive Edge: The Cynefin Framework bridges complexity theory, systems thinking, and knowledge management. It can be used to help organizations adequately understand the differing contexts within which challenges arise, and how best to construct adaptive responses. Snowden’s Line of Coherence is also useful for teams in navigating the Complex domain and developing effective experiments and prototypes.

- Ronald Heifetz’s six tenets of adaptive leadership infuse all EmcArts programs. His understanding of the distinction between authority and leadership has been highly influential, and his recognition of the difference between technical fixes and adaptive responses to challenges echoes Cynefin.

- Edgar Schein’s groundbreaking work on leadership and organizational culture recognizes the hidden power of culture, how it gets formed, and how leaders can act symbolically to accelerate culture change. Schein acknowledges the stickiness of organizational assumptions and the importance of questioning them as an essential prelude to innovation work.

- Brenda Zimmermann was a pioneering Canadian thinker in applying the dynamics of complex adaptive social systems to organizational management. She articulated the sometimes topsy-turvy, counter-intuitive approaches needed to be a successful strategic leader when unpredictability rules and networks are proliferating.

- The radical systems thinker Donella Meadows is highly influential in contemporary systems practice, at both the organizational and social levels. Her work helps to connect the questioning of assumptions, via Schein’s analysis of culture, to leveraged systemic change within organizations.

- Meg Wheatley’s work links complexity and systems change through the crucial idea of emergence, developed from her study of the natural world. Intentionally fostering emergence through three stages of human network development is an important part of the guidance offered to Innovation Teams.

- English researcher Meredith Belbin has carried out decades of work on the qualities of high-performing teams. Team members find that understanding their own and others’ habitual team role preferences makes them better able to contribute to different stages of adaptive work, manage disagreements, and positively impact team dynamics.

Application deadline: 2pm on May 28, 2018

After submitting your application, you will receive an email confirmation of its receipt. If you don’t receive confirmation within three business hours of making your submission, please contact Foundation staff.

Selection Process

Applications will be reviewed by EmcArts and Metcalf. Although no specific experience in guiding adaptive work is required, an openness to learning new approaches to complexity, systems thinking, group dynamics, and organizational innovation is essential. Participants will need to be prepared to share their knowledge and expertise with the other Associates, to support each other in developing skills, and to be committed to action-learning throughout the program. EmcArts and Metcalf value facilitators who:

- Communicate with clarity and confidence
- Are highly effective in managing room dynamics by allowing appropriate time for activities and ensuring all voices are heard
- Listen actively to synthesize and helpfully re-frame others’ contributions
- Foster supportive environments that encourage inquiry and exploration
- Provoke others to question old assumptions and develop new insights

This application process is designed to better understand which candidates will likely accrue the most benefit to their practice and therefore also for the field. The summation of your application materials should give us an understanding of your current practice, your enthusiasm for adaptive change, and your appetite to build the above five skillsets. To further probe suitability, some candidates may be asked to participate in a video-conference call during the month of June 2018. All applicants will be notified of their application status by June 27, 2018.
